Responsibilities include managing the company's strategic planning, daily operational focus, and employee development needs for all departments relating to engineering.

San Diego, CA (PRWEB) June 10, 2009 -- PaperFree Corporation, the leader in information capture and management solutions for business and government, today announced that Scott Berry will be heading up their engineering efforts companywide as the newly appointed Director of Engineering.

"Mr. Berry has already played a key part in our success over the years - most recently overseeing our technical support department. In this new role, he will bring even more focus and attention to a very important piece of the PaperFree 'equation' - IT Engineering. PaperFree is a full service provider of IT solutions for information capture and management. At the very core of our success is our ability to engineer solutions better than our competition." said James Robinson, President and CEO of PaperFree. "Mr. Berry has always helped us push the envelope as it relates to challenging himself and others around him. It is that same drive that we are counting on to help us continue our role as a proven leader in the marketplace."

PaperFree Corporation specializes in providing complete end to end document capture and management solutions to various private and government customers nationwide. As one of EMC's largest and most successful partners, PaperFree has successfully helped hundreds of customers manage the burden of dealing with paper for years.

"Hiring and developing the very best engineers in the business is critical to our success and a major component of our day to day strategy." said Scott Berry, "I am excited about the opportunity this new role provides me to help carry on that mission. I have seen the success that comes from putting together a solid plan of embracing the very best in new technologies by helping our customers reap the rewards associated with it. Good engineering methodology is the key to ensuring we do that successfully each and
